JACKSON SHRINE AT LEXINGTON IS NOW OPEN

Lexington.- Virginia's youngest historic shrine made its debut Sunday, August 29, at Lexington, when the only home ever owned by Stonewall Jackson was opened to the public. The home, which was purchased by the Stonewall Jackson Memorial, Inc., headed by Jay Winston Johns, of Charlottesville, was owned and occupied by Jackson for three happy years preceding the War Between the States. It is the aim of the Memorial to ultimately furnish it throughout with Jackson possessions and relics.

Through the generosity of a number of Jackson's descendants, the shrine will house many of his personal possessions which have been in use by his immediate descendents during the intervening century. The include an old walnut clock, a small table, a piece of tapestry which Jackson, when a Major brought back from the Mexican War, all presented by Mrs. E. R. Preston, of Washington, D. C., the granddaughter of General Jackson Two great granddaughters, Mrs John S. Creech and Mrs. E. N. Shaffner, both of Winston-Salem, N. C., have contributed a small table and desk and a mahogany sofa and two chairs, bought by Jackson and his wife, Mary Anna Morrison Jackson, on their honeymoon in Philadelphia in 1857. Mrs. Creech has also presented a dining room table used in the Jackson home, and Mrs. Byington McAfee, another great granddaughter, has contributed a sofa and small ottoman used by Jackson.

Even as a child Jackson had a penchant for high adventure as shown by a small trunk used by him and his brother Warren when they ran away as boys, building a small raft to sail down the Ohio. While the escapade came to nothing, Mrs. Marie Arnold Pifer and Miss Grace Arnold, of Buckhannon, West Virginia, great grandnieces of Stonewall Jackson, have presented the trunk as an affectionate tribute to a younger Jackson, as well as a teapot and cady used by him in the Army and a small miniature of Jackson's father.

Other family pictures given the Memorial by Mrs. E. R. Preston, are four different studies of Jackson—one is an appealing picture showing Jackson as a small boy taken with his mother, who died when he was six. Another picture showing Jackson with clean shaven face and in his Federal uniform was taken during the Mexican War; still another was taken from life during the War Between the States, and the fourth was the last picture taken of him shortly before his death. A portrait of Jackson's daughter, Julia, taken in her wedding gown, completes the collection of Jackson pictures acquired to date.

Supplementing the original Jackson possessions are pieces of furniture of that period.

SYNTHESIZED FABRICS HAVE COMMON PECULIARITIES

All of the synthesized fabrics for the home (the so-called miracle fibers) have some peculairities in common.

Reporting on recent research done by the Mellon Institute, Miss Ruth Jamison, home furnishings specialist at VPI, says the good points-are such things as lightness in weight, low moisture absorption (and therefore rapid drying), ease of washing, permanence of shape and resistance to insects and mildew.

On the other side of the ledger, the fabrics have a few faults. Some that have not been licked to date are: Static electricity in some fibers attract dust, causing rapid soiling and graying of the fibers Heat of the sun's rays will melt some fibers or cause rottening of curtains at sunny windows (orlon excepted); Lighted cigarettes or hot ashes melt holes in plastic furniture covers; Some acids, including industrial gases in the air harm some fabrics (orlon still an exception.)

Other faults are indifferent draping qualities in heavy drapery materials; only moderate resistance to wrinkles; a limited range of colors and colors not thoroughly evaluated as to light exposure and washing; and breakage of fiberglass curtains that are often blown against windows and screens.

Devotional Reading: Psalm 19:14-17.

Growing by Working

Lesson for September 5, 1954

"NOW I get me up to work,
I pray thee, Lord, I may not shirk.
When I lay me down at night,
I pray thee, Lord, my work be right."

These lines by an unknown author hung in the bedroom of a man who during his 85 years showed that his prayer was sincere. He was a Christian; and a Christian will think of his work as done always in the sight of God. A janitor of a church was asked why he kept a certain place behind the pulpit so clean. "Nobody can see it," he was told. "But God sees it," the janitor said.

Dr. Foreman

The Bible gives us some light on work in general, as God sees it.

There Is No Free Lunch

The little church at Thessalonica was troubled with "mooochers." The people there had got the idea that the end of the world was right around the corner. Jesus would come again soon, in their own lifetime. They did not see the use in working any more; the house they were building (for instance) would not be finished before the end would come; the crop they were planting would never be harvested before the Judgment Day. So these eager, expectant Christians just quit their jobs (in caves . . . but of course they had to eat. So they became free - loaders, boarding with such members of the parish as did keep their jobs. When their traveling Bishop Paul heard about this, he wrote them a very plain letter; indeed he had said some plain words while he was there getting the church organized, only they seem to have forgotten it. "He that will not work, let him not eat," he said. Help the needy, yes by all means; but don't feed the lazy. There is only one basic rule of economics (as an economist has said) and it is one anybody can understand: There is no free lunch.

What Is Useful Work?

Now there is no special virtue in work, in itself. A man could work very hard shoveling sand from one pile on the beach to another pile, and back again, all day long. But it would do nobody any good. To be sure, he would be developing his muscles; but he could do that better some other way at some more useful job. The Bible's references to work always bring in the idea that the work is to be useful. Work that performs no service to any one is not for the serious Christian. This is a particularly important point for young Christians deciding on a life's work. We ought to work, of course, we don't want to be objects of charity, we don't want to be carried, we want to do something useful in the world. But what kind of work is useful? Paul told the Thessalonians that they should work with their hands, because they were all hand-workers; but some of the most useful work in the world is not done with the hands. Two points should be borne in mind: first that as a Christian I ought to seek the most useful work I can do, and second that I can be most useful in what I can do best.

Growing by Working

Work makes the man. Or at least, work shapes the man. Look at any picture of a high school senior class; they look all about alike, and for that matter look like any other senior class in America. But take a picture (if you could get it) of that same class twenty-five years later, or more, when they have all been at work in various jobs for years. Some may be drifters, ne'er-do-wells, and they look it; misfits because they have never stuck to useful work. The others who have stayed on one job or another, will look different by now, partly because of the kinds of work they have been doing. The housewife, the school teacher, the farmer, the banker, the writer, the soldier, the artist—they do not look alike any more. We grow by working. But there is another question too: Does my work help me to grow as a Christian? No doubt the slave-drivers of ancient Egypt grew by their work—grew more devilish; Moses was growing, out in the wilderness of Midian tending sheep. But he was growing more God-like. It is not simply what we do that counts; it is the spirit in which we do it.

THE COMMON GLORY AIMS AT 75,000 FOR 1954 ATTENDANCE FIGURE

Williamsburg, Va.- Attendance for the eighth season of "The Common Glory," Virginia's symphonic drama of the American Revolution, is expected to exceed 75,000 by closing night, September 5, according to Allen P. Matthews, executive vice president of The Jamestown Corporation which produces the show. Some 65,000 had already attended the 1954 production as of August 29.

The weather during the final week will be a principal factor, said Matthews. So far only two performances during the season have been cancelled because of rain.

(The drama is presented in the outdoor Lake Matoaka amphitheater in Williamsburg.) Last year's record of only two rain-outs during the season was the best since the first season of the drama in 1947, and was reflected in the fact that attendance in 1953 exceeded all but the first year.

Many new innovations have marked this year's production. In addition to the already well-known a cappella choir a new 16-piece "little symphony" orchestra was a highlight of the eighth season. Replacing the organ used in the past, the orchestra provided true symphonic accompaniment and actually played a principal role on stage in several of the scenes. Dressed in Colonial costumes and employing only those instruments which might have been used by a similar group in the 18th century, the orchestra represented a further step in the efforts of the producers and author Paul Green to perfect the performances.

A number of changes were necessary in the staging of the production this year because of the orchestra, which was "in and of the show." In addition, Green revised much of the script, several scenes being completely re-writtn, notably the Jamestown Scene.

NEW POSITIONS IN HEALTH DEPARTMENT

Several new positions have been created within the State Health Department to administer the recently established State Meat Inspection program, according to Dr. Mack I. Shanholtz, State Health Commissioner.

Duties of the employees, known as meat sanitarians, will be to assist in performing ante mortem and post mortem examinations of animals in packing plants throughout the state. "This means," Dr. Shanholtz states, "that the animals will be examined both before and after they are slaughtered.

"The meat sanitarians must be able to tell the difference between healthy and diseased meat. When the sanitarian spots diseased meat he will put it aside. Then a local veterinarian, who is employed on a part-time basis, will examine the meat and decide whether or not to condemn it," Dr. Shanholtz continued.

Each meat sanitarian will be assigned to a meat packing or a meat processing plant on a full-time basis. The sanitarians will be paid by the state on a salary scale of $3456 to $4128. They will observe the usual state personnel practices such as a 40-hour week, sick leave, annual leave, and retirement.

Southern States Annual Meeting

Nearly 700 members of Southern States Cooperative, their families and friends in the Appomattox area heard reports of the Cooperative's services for the 1953-54 fiscal year which ended June 30, at their local annual membership meeting held last Friday night here.

In addition to the report given by District Manager R. R. Feagans, members were elected to the Advisory Board and the Farm Home Advisory Committee.

One of the highlights of the meeting was the Farm Talent Round-up Contest which was sponsored jointly by Coleman's Feed and Seed Store and Southern States Cooperative with the Original Amateur Hour Television Show of Radic City, New York, cooperating. There were four acts entered in the contest.

Elected to the local Advisory Board were Abbitt Coleman and Richard Webb, both of Appomattox.

Elected to the local Farm Home Advisory Committee were Mrs. C. R. Morton of Spout Spring, and Mrs. Walter Phelps, Gladstone.

Winners of the Farm Talent Round-up Contest were:

First prize went to a pianist, Bobby Barger, Appomattox.

Second prize went to Howlett Martin, Spout Spring, who presented an act with the ukulele.

Third prize went to Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Coleman, Appomattox, who presented singing with guitar.

Elected as delegate and alternate respectively to attend the district election meeting in October were J. L. Torrence and Abbitt Coleman.

Abbitt Coleman was chosen to represent the local board as its delegate at the Southern States Annual Stockholders Meeting to be held in Richmond in November. J. L. Torrence was chosen as alternate.
